Heritage of Lucknow

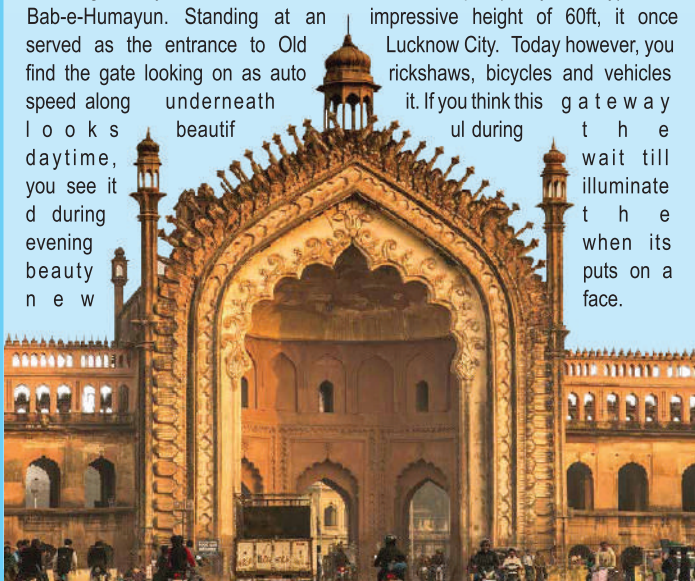

Lucknow the capital of the north Indian state of Uttar Pradesh is a modern city that can boast of having magnificent historical monuments situated at the banks of river Gomti, tributary of the Ganga, Lucknow is known for its gardens, parks & unique archaeological monuments. Famous as the city of Nawabs, Lucknow has retained its charm as a bastion of culinary & cultural delights. The people of this city are known for their exquisite charm, courtesy & flair of the Urdu language.

The city boasts the magnificent Bara Imambara, a historical masterpiece that even modern architects find perplexing. Constructed in 1784 by Nawab Asaf-ud-Daula, the edifice was designed by Kifayat-ullah, a relative of the architect of the Taj Mahal. Originally built as part of a famine relief program, the Asafai Imambara is a grand & elegant structure that resembles a fortress. The building is a fusion of Rajput and Mughal architectural styles with Gothic influences, making it a unique and fascinating sight to behold. The Bara Imambara is not a mosque or a mausoleum, but rather a massive structure with intriguing elements. The halls and vaults showcase a strong Islamic influence, adding to the building's allure.

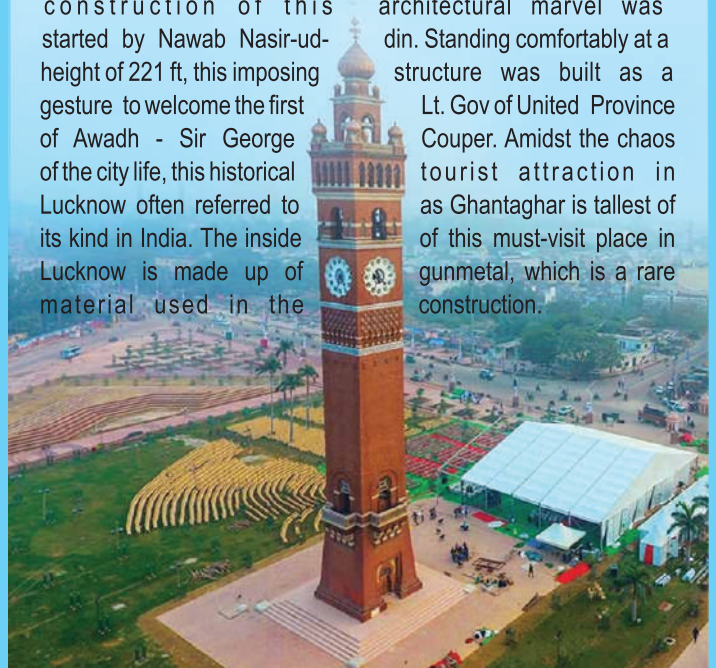

Rumi Darwaza

The Rumi Darwaza (Gate) is an incredible structure which stands imposingly between Bara Imambara & Chota Imambara in Lucknow, Uttar Pradesh. Constructed in 1784 under the rule of Nawab Asaf-ud-Daula, it is a fine example of Awadhi architecture, or the Lucknow School of Architecture. It was a style adopted by the Nawabs of Awadh to preserve the Mughal architectural style while experimenting with newer styles and materials. The Rumi Darwaza, one of the heritage attractions in Uttar Pradesh, is also referred to as Turkish Gate because it bears a strong similarity in design to a gateway built in ancient Constantinople (today's Turkey) called Bab-e-Humayun. Standing at an impressive height of 60ft, it once served as the entrance to Old Lucknow City. Today however, you find the gate looking on as auto rickshaws, bicycles and vehicles speed along underneath it. If you think this gateway looks beautiful during the daytime, you see it illuminated during evening beauty new

Hussainabad Clock Tower

An interesting attraction during a sightseeing tour in the city of Lucknow, is Hussainabad Clock Tower. Located near Rumi Darwaza, Hussainabad Clock Tower was erected by Hussainabad Trust in the year 1881. The construction of this architectural marvel was started by Nawab Nasir-ud-din. Standing comfortably at a height of 221 ft, this imposing structure was built as a gesture to welcome the first Lt. Gov of United Province of Awadh - Sir George Couper. Amidst the chaos of the city life, this historical tourist attraction in Lucknow often referred to as Ghantaghar is tallest of its kind in India. The inside of this must-visit place in Lucknow is made up of gunmetal, which is a rare material used in the construction.
